

Ⓐ–Ⓔ Anatomy of the Community Note — each element is one ingredient of recategorization

📌 COMMUNITY NOTE #14 · pinned by moderators

"the song that made you fall for K-pop"
— add one song each (ARMY + BLINK) to publish

ARMY u/borahae_kim

"Spring Day — the bridge got me through finals week"

BLINK u/rosie_posie

"Playing With Fire — the chorus hit once and it was over for me"

🔒 publishes ONLY when both fandoms have contributed

🎵 Community Playlist #14 — published

ARMY × BLINK both flairs kept, both authors credited
↗ shared together · replies & upvotes accrue to the joint post

Participant view contains no study language — the note only says what to do.

- Ⓐ Superordinate framing
Prompt is about K-pop as a whole — never "defend your group." The shared category is activated, never declared.
- Ⓑ Dual identity preserved
Contributions stay flaired ARMY / BLINK — the fandom identity is kept; the shared one is added, not imposed.
- Ⓒ Structural interdependence
The publish gate needs BOTH sides — a goal neither fandom can reach alone (common fate).
- Ⓓ Co-owned "we" object
The artifact is jointly credited and shared together — praise lands on something OURS, not on either side.
- Ⓔ Blinding by design
No purpose disclosure anywhere participant-facing — say what to do, never what the study is about.

The LLM is plumbing, not a participant

1 · template bank (30)

2 · screen framing

3 · pair across flairs

4 · verbatim layout

✓ templates · pairs · lays out text
✗ never poses as a fan or rewrites text
✗ never mentions the study ("automated")

Same two users, one day apart

Day 1 — before the note (baseline thread)

ARMY
"ratio + your bias is an industry plant. the whole group is marketing 🧠"

BLINK
"obsessed AND pressed 🤖 most toxic fandom alive, blocked"

↓ co-author Note #14

Day 2 — after co-publishing the playlist

BLINK
"ok wait 'Spring Day' is actually beautiful. adding it to my rotation"

ARMY "we have taste on both sides lol 🤝"